Many Psalms, like this one, give us a wonderful example of what it practically looks like to trust God with our lives and seek to love Him with our whole selves. The psalmists model aspects of what Jesus said was the most important commandment: to love God with our whole heart, mind, and soul (Matthew 11:35-37). They examined life circumstances. They processed emotions. They were honest with their doubts and struggles. In the end, this processing led them to whole-heartedly choose to turn toward God and be devoted to Him.

As you read through Psalm 42, you can utilize the questions on the following pages to help identify the psalmist’s processing and the impact it had on his relationship with God. The purpose of these questions are two-fold:

1. Help you identify different awarenesses the psalmist came to as he processed what was happening.
2. Give you a guide and “permission,” so to speak, to follow the model of the psalmist’s processing and engagement with God.

Feel free to utilize the questions as a one-day study or to walk through and process the questions on different days. Share insights you glean with a family member or friend.
For the worship leader. A contemplative song of the sons of Korah.

1 My soul is dry and thirsts for You, True God, as a deer thirsts for water.

2 I long for the True God who lives. When can I stand before Him and feel His comfort?

3 Right now I’m overwhelmed by my sorrow and pain; I can’t stop feasting on my tears. People crowd around me and say, “Where is your True God whom you claim will save?”

4 With a broken heart, I remember times before When I was with Your people. Those were better days. I used to lead them happily into the True God’s house, Singing with joy, shouting thanksgivings with abandon, joining the congregation in the celebration.

5 Why am I so overwrought? Why am I so disturbed? Why can’t I just hope in God? Despite all my emotions, I will believe and praise the One who saves me and is my life.

6 My God, my soul is so traumatized; the only help is remembering You wherever I may be; From the land of the Jordan to Hermon’s high place to Mount Mizar.

7 In the roar of Your waterfalls, ancient depths surge, calling out to the deep. All Your waves break over me; am I drowning?

8 Yet in the light of day, the Eternal shows me His love. When night settles in and all is dark, He keeps me company— His soothing song, a prayerful melody to the True God of my life.

9 Even still, I will say to the True God, my rock and strength: “Why have You forgotten me? Why must I live my life so depressed, crying endlessly while my enemies have the upper hand?”

10 My enemies taunt me. They shatter my soul the way a sword shatters a man’s bones. They keep taunting all the day long, “Where is He, your True God?”

11 Why am I so overwrought, Why am I so disturbed? Why can’t I just hope in God? Despite all my emotions, I will believe and praise the One who saves me, my God.
The psalmist modeled how to stay connected to the love of God in the midst of external and internal turmoil. May we learn from him how to stay connected to the love of God, the one who is able to keep us safe from falling (JUDE 1:22-25), and grow our ability to love Him with our whole heart.
